Born in Brazil, Dr. Tracy shared her experiences of leaving her home country at the age of 19 to work as a nanny in the United States. Her rise from a domestic worker to a respected labor leader and scholar is nothing short of remarkable. Dr. Tracy recounted the difficulties she faced, including the long hours, low wages, and lack of legal protections that many immigrant workers endure. But she also spoke of the determination and resilience that fueled her desire to make a difference.
