Growth Driver Of The Patient Controlled Injectors Market

The increase in the prevalence of chronic diseases is expected to propel the growth of the patient-controlled injectors market going forward. Chronic illness is a long-term health condition that usually lasts three months or longer and may worsen over time. The rise in chronic illness is due to factors such as the aging population, the obesity epidemic, socioeconomic factors, and environmental exposures. Chronic diseases use patient-controlled injectors to allow patients to self-administer medications with precision, ease, and on a schedule that aligns with their treatment plans.
