

Atlanta Metro Personal Injury Law Group Is Excited To Inform The Public About Significant Car Accident Legislation In Georgia

Dunwoody, GA – Atlanta Metro Personal Injury Law Group is excited to inform the public about significant legislative changes impacting how car accident claims are handled in Georgia. Senate Bill 83, recently signed into law by Governor Brian Kemp on April 22, 2024, introduces major reforms to the pre-suit time-limited demands (TLDs) process in auto accident cases. This new law aims to bring clarity and fairness to settlement negotiations, addressing the chaotic and often manipulative practices previously employed in Atlanta.

Under the new legislation, TLDs are now considered bilateral contracts, meaning that a binding agreement is formed once an insurer accepts the material terms of a demand. This change is designed to reduce failure-to-settle litigation and protect insurers from bad faith claims, provided they comply with the specified conditions. The law also enumerates seven essential terms that must be included in all TLDs, ensuring transparency and consistency in the settlement process.

“Senate Bill 83 is a game-changer for both claimants and insurers in Georgia,” said a notable attorney at Atlanta Metro Personal Injury Law Group. “This legislation levels the playing field by eliminating ‘gotcha’ demands and ensuring that settlement negotiations are conducted in good faith. It provides much-needed clarity and protection for all parties involved in auto accident claims.”

Key points from the newly enacted legislation encompass the following crucial aspects:

Bilateral Contracts: TLDs are now considered bilateral contracts, forming a binding agreement upon acceptance.

Essential Terms: Seven specific terms must be included in all TLDs, ensuring clarity and fairness.

Safe Harbor Provision: Insurers are protected from negligent/bad faith failure to settle claims if they comply with the material terms.

Impact on Claimants and Insurers: The law aims to reduce manipulative practices and ensure good faith negotiations.
