Definition:

Football cleats for American football are specialized shoes designed to give players the best possible performance on the field. To provide traction on various playing surfaces, they feature cleats or studs on the outsole, which enhances stability and reduces the chance of slipping when making rapid movements. They are supportive, comfortable, and protective and are frequently made of durable materials like mesh or synthetic leather. Ankle support increases stability, a reinforced toe cap offers impact protection, and comfortable cushioned insoles complete the set. Flexibility to enable fast direction changes and ventilation for breathability are common
