Robin Brackbill, owner of Fabby-Do, shared her thoughts on the new offerings: "We understand the challenges families face in making season long commitments. That's why we've designed these weekly options to ensure that everyone can find time to invest in creative and memorable experiences. It's all about making creativity accessible and fun for everyone."

Research supports the importance of creative experiences for children. Studies have shown that engaging in creative activities can significantly boost cognitive skills, problem-solving abilities, and emotional well-being. According to a study published in Psychology Today, childhood creativity is linked to higher educational attainment and better career outcomes in adulthood¹. These findings highlight the long-term benefits of fostering creativity from a young age.
