DALLAS, TX, UNITED STATES, September 5, 2024 /EINPresswire.com/ -- The International Peace Commission (IPC) is calling on all African country's governments and relevant authorities to exercise heightened vigilance and verify any individuals or organizations claiming to represent the IPC within their respective countries. This step comes in response to an increasing number of fraudulent activities where individuals falsely pose as IPC officials to exploit unsuspecting individuals and organizations.

It has come to the attention of the IPC that several individuals have been issuing unauthorized correspondence, appointment letters, and membership certificates, falsely claiming to represent the organization in various African countries. In many cases, these individuals seek financial gain or personal information by misleading the public about their affiliation with the IPC.

The IPC wants to make it clear that all official communications, appointment letters, and membership certificates can only be issued by the IPC Headquarters, which is based in the United States. No local IPC official is authorized to issue these documents or solicit donations on behalf of the organization. All official IPC communications are conducted using email addresses associated with the organization's official domain. IPC does not use free email providers for any official business.

We urge African countries' governments to verify the authenticity of any individuals claiming to represent the IPC in their countries by contacting the IPC Headquarters directly. This is an important step to protect the integrity of our operations and prevent fraudsters from deceiving the public.

The IPC does not offer prizes, awards, certificates, scholarships, or compensation for internet fraud through any unofficial channels. Any such claims should be treated with extreme caution as they are likely part of a fraudulent scheme. Those affected by these scams are encouraged to report the incidents to local law enforcement for appropriate action.
