-- BuilderComs, a leading provider of communication and project management software for the construction industry, is proud to announce that the company and its founder, Ron Nussbaum, have been accepted into the prestigious UNC Wilmington Center for Innovation and Entrepreneurship (CIE) Mentor Program. This program is designed to support high-growth startups by providing access to experienced mentors who can offer guidance and strategic advice to help companies scale and succeed.

Ron Nussbaum, the visionary behind BuilderComs, will be mentored by a distinguished group of business leaders, including Hoop Morgan, Chris Panaro, Ed Chao, Wayne Hippo, Mike Provance, and Diane Durance. These mentors bring a wealth of experience from various industries, including technology, finance, entrepreneurship, and innovation, and will provide invaluable support to BuilderComs as it continues to grow and expand its market presence.

"We are thrilled to be part of the UNC Wilmington CIE Mentor Program," said Ron Nussbaum, Founder and CEO of BuilderComs. "This opportunity will allow us to tap into the collective expertise of our mentors and gain insights that will help us accelerate our growth. We're excited to work closely with such accomplished individuals who are passionate about helping startups like ours succeed."

BuilderComs has been gaining significant traction in the construction industry, offering a unique solution that centralizes communication, document management, and real-time project updates into one easy-to-use platform. With the support of the CIE Mentor Program, BuilderComs aims to refine its business strategy, expand its customer base, and continue its mission to transform the way construction professionals manage their projects.
