Nursing Care Services Market

Rising chronic disease burden: As many countries experience an aging population, conditions like diabetes, cancer and heart disease are on the rise. This will drive substantial demand for services supporting independent living and long-term care.

Advancing technologies: Telehealth, remote patient monitoring, and digital therapeutics are becoming more widespread. Early adopters stand to improve access, outcomes and lower costs through technology-enabled care delivery models.

Focus on preventative care: Payers are incentivizing providers to shift from reactive to proactive care, with a focus on health management, nutrition education and lifestyle coaching. New value-based care programs emphasize prevention.

Market consolidation: Larger players are acquiring smaller providers to build scale and market share across multiple regions. This will accelerate as independent practices face increased operational pressures.

Skilled workforce shortage: With not enough nurses and caregivers to meet growing demand, innovative training programs and recruiting partnerships will be critical to overcoming this challenge facing the industry.
