About Indigenous Dermatology:

Based on the belief that every indigenous person deserves access to quality and culturally sensitive care, Indigenous Dermatology works to provide remote dermatology to rural, tribal communities in the United States. They believe that the best way to guarantee high-quality dermatologic care is to rely upon and invest in local communities and health systems and requires well-trained staff; proper supplies; health facilities with reliable space, electricity, and running water; and culturally appropriate best practices that ensure patients receive quality care. Their aim is to eliminate the social, economic, physical, and cultural barriers these communities experience, providing specialized medical providers like doctors and nurses, no matter where they live.
