Growth Driver Of The Vocal Biomarkers Market

The rising cases of neurological and psychological disorders are expected to propel the growth of the voice biomarkers market going forward. Neurological disorders are medical conditions affecting the nervous system, whereas psychological disorders are conditions that impact mood, thinking, and behavior. The increasing cases of neurological and psychological disorders can be attributed to factors such as increased stress, aging populations, lifestyle changes, and greater awareness and diagnosis capabilities. Neurological and psychological disorders use voice biomarkers to non-invasively detect and monitor disease-specific changes in speech patterns, pitch, and rhythm, providing valuable insights into the presence and progression of these conditions.
