Surge in demand for tequila in developing countries is serves as a potential opportunity for the expansion of the global tequila market. In the developing countries such as India and Brazil, many consumers have adopted western culture and are attracted to alcoholic spirits. In bars and pubs and house parties, tequila is getting more popularity due to its new flavors and vast taste. The developing countries like India and China have a huge youth base that is creating major tequila market opportunities as youngsters are getting inclined toward alcohol and adopting the party culture. There are ongoing tequila market trends such as people of these countries are following the trend of parties and outings, they are being more sophisticated about drinking. Manufactures are further focusing on investing in developing countries due to government support and increase in disposable income.

Moreover, due to the outbreak of the COVID-19 pandemic, manufacturers have increased social media advertisement of consuming tequila products to reach a large consumer base. However, implementation of lockdown and curfew practices globally are affecting the domestic as well as international production of tequila products, which, in turn, hampers the growth of the overall market. Thus, the outbreak of COVID-19 has negatively impacted the tequila industry in 2020, as sales of companies have reduced and operations have been halted.
