The three-day course, held at USIDHR's Washington, DC headquarters, featured in-depth sessions on cross-cultural communication, formal diplomatic practices, and the nuances of international business etiquette. It attracted a diverse range of participants, including diplomats and senior leaders in industries where cross-border relations are key to success.

“The ability to navigate international relations with confidence and professionalism is more essential than ever,” said Dr. Isabelle Vladoiu, founder of USIDHR. “Our participants have gained not just knowledge, but practical tools that will enable them to stand out in any international arena. This training sharpens the very skills that can make or break critical diplomatic or business interactions.”

Among the notable attendees was the Ambassador of Fiji, who praised the program, stating: "Dr.

Vladoiu's engaging teaching and practical insights made complex concepts accessible, giving us the confidence to navigate diplomatic interactions."

Participants took part in simulations, interactive workshops, and networking activities that focused on applying diplomatic skills to real-world situations. The training culminated in a formal graduation ceremony, where attendees were awarded their certification in International Business and Diplomatic Protocol.

USIDHR continues to set the standard for excellence in diplomacy education, and the success of this latest training underscores the growing demand for expertise in international relations.

The next International Business and Diplomatic Protocol training session is scheduled for November 13-15, 2024, in Washington, DC.
