SPYRAL, a groundbreaking film exploring mental health themes, has been selected as the featured film to launch the National Alliance on Mental Illness (NAMI) Texas 40th Annual Convention in El Paso this November. This recognition further emphasizes the film's significance in sparking crucial conversations about mental health. Scott Hauck, Managing Partner at Legacy Capital Fund, stated, "At Legacy Capital Fund, we recognize the growth of digital health tools, and supporting social drivers of change is one way to help people save money while offering better access to healthcare technologies we may acquire."

Legacy Capital Fund views healthcare technology, particularly in the mental health sector, as a key growth area for private equity investments. The firm's support for SPYRAL demonstrates its commitment to fostering cultural dialogue that promotes access to mental health resources.

"SPYRAL is a powerful mental health documentary directed by a director who has won multiple Oscars," says Jennifer Hutchins, Producer for SPYRAL. "Legacy Capital Fund is forward-thinking to support this film's growth by understanding cultural tools like movie can help drive demand for mental health subscription technologies that are in the growth stage as telemedicine gains adoption."

Investment Strategy

Legacy Capital Fund's investment approach focuses on identifying and scaling promising healthcare technology companies, supporting American legacy businesses, and maximizing returns for investors while providing beneficial supplementary social benefits.
