"Willow", it follows a lively little girl, "Willow," who leads her group of friends through a magical Halloween celebration. The day starts with Willow preparing for a Halloween party at her home, decorating with pumpkins, lights, and balloons. Joined by her little brother, Ben, and later by her friend

Annie, Willow enjoys the autumn day before the evening festivities begin. The children, dressed in creative costumes, gather for dancing, games, and trick-or-treating, showing respect, cooperation, and friendship throughout their adventure.

A review by Barbara Bamberger Scott of the US Review of Books says "Throughout the story, with its morals and models, are the remarkable pictorial presentations, with such details as the group's colorful, clever costuming, the sweet face of a neighbor offering treats to the children, the jack-o'-lantern motif on treat bags, and the continued presence of Kitty the cat as a loyal onlooker and a member of the group, too, as they dance, play, and roam the brightly decorated neighborhood together. It is this combination—lively illustrations, a spirited storyline, and gently asserted, time-honored principles offering a focus for group discussion and individual understanding—that give this creation its well-deserved attention and appreciation.”
