Definition:

The goal of Equine insurance is to protect policyholders from unforeseen losses. This loss can take several forms in horses, including accidental injury, death, veterinarian treatment, or injury to third parties. There are numerous types of policy coverage available, and they vary widely between companies. In general, the owner gets what they pay for, and the disparity in prices charged by insurers usually reflects the vastly different levels of coverage. It is, of course, the owner's obligation to verify that the coverage they purchase is adequate for their purposes. If in doubt, seek an independent insurance broker, obtain several quotes, and compare the levels of coverage available.
