Virtual events are digitally modeled meetings and conferences that employ internet platforms to enable participants to digitally share information, discuss, and resolve issues. The outbreak of the COVID-19 pandemic has compelled authorities to limit outside mobility of population. Virtual events are a novel concept as they do not require a real site to be held and reduces the financial load on attendees, owing to low rates. The benefits of virtual events, such as cheap cost of investments, high-value proposition, additional after-service support, and enhanced analytics, entice corporate firms to choose virtual events over actual luxury events. As a result, rise in virtual events is limiting expansion of the corporate luxury events sector.

Corporate events such as conventions, conferences, seminars, and trade shows involve a lot of conversation about companies, goods, ideas, and strategies. These kinds of events, in general, fail to hold attention of participants throughout the course, resulting in low productivity, participation, and efforts. The host firms have engaged event management providers to incorporate additional activities that would aid in participant retention and make events more entertaining. As a result, event organizers are including interactive activities in their events to boost audience engagement and productivity. Activities such as quiz games, team building games, and other art activities perform well as they serve to alleviate discomfort and boredom while also increasing participant attention during the session. The inclusion of interactive activities in corporate events is predicted to boost the corporate luxury events market growth.
