Rev. Anthony Evans, President of the National Black Church Initiative

The M.O.M.S. Tour aims to improve maternal health outcomes, particularly among African American and American Indian/Alaska Native women, in communities with high maternal mortality and morbidity rates.

President of the National Black Church Initiative, the Rev. Anthony Evans, says, "NBCI is proud and excited to work and lean its 150,000 churches to the M.O.M.S. campaign. African American women are dying, and it is good to see that our government is trying to do something about it. NBCI will be sending to the State a comprehensive proposal that has the highest maternal mortality and morbidity rates in the coming month. If it is accepted and fully funded, we can cut that rate in half in three years."

Furthermore, the M.O.M.S program engages in meaningful discussions, teaching pregnant and postpartum women how to advocate for themselves in healthcare settings. It brings together mental health professionals, birth workers, medical professionals, and community members to provide resources and support for pregnant and postpartum women, including those at risk. In addition to resources for babies, we will also have dedicated resources for dads and children, provide access to educational information, essential health-related services such as health insurance and mental health providers, and the opportunity to connect to doulas and midwives.

NBCI is proud to congratulate the M.O.M.S. program on its remarkable success to date. The impact it has made is truly inspiring. NBCI support and churches will triple these numbers below to have a great impact. The M.O.M.S. Tour pilot launched in 2023, making 11 stops where we:
