

Tributary Development Announces Launch, Focusing on Housing Solutions in Mountain Towns

Led by former senior professionals at Fading West, the new venture will focus on residential development in Colorado and adjoining mountain states.

BUENA VISTA, CO, UNITED STATES,
September 26, 2024 /

EINPresswire.com/ -- In conjunction with Fading West, the senior members of the firm's development team announced a spin-off of the development platform into a new entity called Tributary Development LLC. The founding partners, Bleecker Seaman, Scott Simmons and Jack Jones, will share ownership of the new entity which will pursue residential investment opportunities across Colorado and adjoining mountain states. The firm will maintain a strategic relationship with Fading West, leveraging Fading West's innovative modular housing platform and integrated general contractor on projects that will benefit from the efficiencies and competitive price points that its products offer.

Tributary will target attainable, mixed income, and market rate investments with a focus on addressing the critical housing shortage in most of our communities. Leveraging their experience in sourcing public and private financing, the principals of Tributary will continue to identify and execute on development opportunities which offer attractive returns while meeting the housing needs in their local community. "We are excited to build off the foundation we have established in the marketplace with our investments to-date with Fading West, and we look forward to working with both public and private partners with our new platform," said co-founder Bleecker Seaman. With a robust pipeline of future projects, co-founder Scott Simmons reinforced that "at Tributary we expect to continue to incorporate in all of our investments innovative land plans and unit designs, while promoting sustainability and a deep understanding of the communities we serve."
