Bulut, Chairwoman of the Turkish Business Women Association (TIKAD), recently celebrated the organization's 20th anniversary. She underscored TIKAD's two decades of dedication to advancing women's leadership across social, political, and economic spheres, both in Turkey and worldwide.

It is significant that Vice President Harris puts the humanitarian crisis in Gaza among the top priorities of foreign policy and take the necessary steps to end the destruction and tragedy.”

TIKAD*

“Our mission has remained clear,” Mrs. Bulut voiced, “to elevate and advance the influence of women while making sure their voices are heard across society and their contributions recognized at every level.” TIKAD has emerged as a platform for delivering insights and recommendations to Turkish parliament members, international organizations, and the public.

TIKAD's vision is to empower women both nationally and globally. Over the past twenty years, the organization has hosted numerous international events, including the 2009 conference “We Are All Mothers,” supported by the U.S. Secretary of State, to spotlight the impact of wars on women worldwide. In 2013, TIKAD and Georgetown University co-hosted the impactful international conference “The Role of Business Women in Peacebuilding and Development” in Washington, D.C.

Mrs Bulut's dedication to egalitarian reform has remained a steadfast connection in her works. At the World Economic Forum held in Davos, Switzerland this year, Mrs. Bulut reaffirmed that even in the face of environmental impacts and global conflicts, “the contribution of eliminating gender inequality to national economies is emphasized on every platform” through TIKAD.

TIKAD has emphasized the vital role of women’s leadership in shaping a better future. Mrs. Bulut affirms that increasing female representation in governance will boost global well-being and drive sustainable prosperity.

As a women’s organization, TIKAD highly values the U.S. Vice President Kamala Harris' statements on recent global developments. Mrs. Bulut expresses that the progress toward a ceasefire in Gaza, led by a female politician, highlights the critical role women play in achieving lasting peace and global prosperity. “It is significant that Vice President Harris puts the humanitarian crisis in Gaza among the top priorities of foreign policy and says that she will take the necessary steps to end the destruction and tragedy experienced in the region and end this war.” TIKAD brightly advocates the uplifting of female voices in legislation, fostering a space where more clear representation is given to those who are often most voiceless in war; women.

As the Chairwoman of Istanbul Galata University, Mrs. Bulut states that “I believe that universities must create an effective system to prepare their students for life, and they must see that meeting students' expectations, that is, respecting students, is the first step to success. That's what I want to do here. To think, decide and move forward together with young people while preparing them for the future. We know that, above all else, Academia wants a free environment, and creativity can only develop in free environments. The minds creating the innovative inventions will carry us into the future. And what they need is education and freedom. Young people want a different world, I am aware. Research shows that young people consider doing what they love more important than the money they earn. I am aware that a strong generation is coming that puts freedom before wealth. This is my ideal as well.”

Mrs. Bulut concluded her remarks by reinforcing TIKAD's commitment to women's leadership on an international scale, in conjunction with our international colleagues: "TIKAD will remain committed to women's leadership advocacy, working tirelessly towards building a better world, not solely within Turkiye; rather part of an international movement which recognizes and values women's contributions in all fields." Mrs. Bulut also stressed how through supporting and integrating female perspectives into management strategies more equitable and effective responses can be developed that may enable more equitable and effective responses to global challenges that might otherwise arise.

Looking ahead, TIKAD is unwavering in its commitment to advancing women's empowerment and leadership. Mrs. Bulut champions her aim to build a world where women's leadership is the standard and their contributions are fully celebrated.
