“The thing that sticks out the most to me about Ragweed was all the people that we met. That's why there's a part of me that never wants to quit doing this. I'm nostalgic for that. I think that everybody should have a little nostalgia in their life. So, let's get together and make people and ourselves smile.

-Cody Canada

For over a decade Cross Canadian Ragweed, a wildly influential indie country rock band from Stillwater, Oklahoma, dominated the touring circuit with sold out shows from coast to coast. Their fan base grew vastly beyond all borders, genres and demographics to what might be considered a cult following that included rockers, cowboys, hippies, executives and college crowds. It became a well-known and shared opinion that if Ragweed was coming to your town, that was where everyone was going to be. The love and support from fans were so enormous that you could almost hear hearts breaking when they disbanded in 2010. For the last 15 years those familiar stages have been void of that “thing” that only Ragweed could deliver, but their loyal bevy of fans and peers has continued to carry their torch. Frontman Cody Canada recently experienced that sentiment standing on the legendary stage of the Ryman Auditorium in Nashville listening to a packed room sing Ragweed favorites back to him. That kind of love and loyalty could no longer be denied. It was clear to Canada that it was high time to give back to the people who have given so much to them.

The excitement has now reached a deafening clamor, fans overwhelmed at the chance to see, once again, one of the most notorious bands to ever come out of the renowned Red Dirt music scene. The incredible rise of the genre is well documented by Oklahoma native and Rolling Stone magazine contributor Josh Crutchmer who will release his new book Red Dirt Unplugged on December 13, 2024 with the foreword written by Canada himself. The final chapter features all four members of CCR discussing this comeback concert, marking the first full-band interview in more than 15 years. www.reddirt-unplugged.com

From Dierks Bentley's song "Free And Easy" in 2006 where he sings "Ragweed's rockin' on the radio" to Koe Wetzel's 2019 song "Ragweed" band to references to the band's music in two different Stephen King novels, the deep impact of the band's music and influence has been memorialized and preserved for the existing fans and the coming generations who will no doubt one day discover the band that "smells like country, tastes like rock n' roll."
