“As a family law firm, our passion is helping families, so we're very humbled to be recognized by such a prestigious organization with an incredible cross-section of renowned lawyers and judges whose passion is helping kids,” said Buttacavoli, “It's amazing to see our future leaders and know they are going to carry our country to the right place.”

This award recognizes firms that dedicate themselves to promoting civic literacy, youth leadership, and career development among Orange County teens. CRF-OC has organized and operated civic and law-related education programs and connected students directly with professionals and community leaders since 1981. In the past year, over 300 attorneys and more than 70 judicial officers volunteered for six different CRF-OC programs to score competitions, coach students and provide civics education. The Peer Court program is especially impactful.

“Peer Court helps young people on the wrong path by providing an alternative to the traditional justice system,” said Buttacavoli. “Instead of proceeding with a regular hearing, juveniles appear before a volunteer judicial officer and a panel of their peers who recommend sanctions to help put them on a better path forward. It has a very high success rate; once they go through this program, they stay out of trouble. The work they do really impacts the fabric of our society.”

Buttacavoli says the cross-section of students makes this a truly inspiring program.

“Worlds collide during these events,” said Mark E. Minyard, Managing Partner of Minyard Morris. “Students learn to have dialogues despite different views or backgrounds. Learning to think and talk about issues respectfully is powerful, and interacting with a judge who comes from a similar socioeconomic or ethnic background and overcame the same challenges can be life-changing.”
