Definition:

An online marketplace where people buy, sell, and exchange sneakers—especially rare or limited-edition models—is known as a sneaker trading platform. These platforms provide a safe environment for transactions, catering to collectors and sneakerheads alike. They regularly verify shoes to make sure they are authentic and not fake. While some systems handle the entire process, including delivery and inspection, others operate in a peer-to-peer model where users communicate directly with one other. GOAT, Stadium Goods, and StockX are typical examples. These websites have grown to be an essential part of sneaker culture, turning shoes into valuable commodities that can be traded and invested in.
