victims, are dozens of veterans in Florida who lost everything. VETCOMM, a leading VA benefits courses and services provider, recently donated much-needed supplies to help those veterans recover.

“As veterans, we need to help each other in times of need”, said VetComm CEO, and Marine veteran Kate Monroe. “I had an American Legion Commander reach out to me from Florida who told me many veterans had their homes destroyed and were without basic needs. I realized I needed to do something because they weren't getting any help”.

Commander Shelley Jefferson said it was the worst storm damage Steinhatchee, Florida had ever seen and people were losing hope. A mutual friend connected him with Monroe.

“27 veterans lost everything and that's just a handful of those affected here”, said Jefferson. “Our grocery store was wiped off the map. “Our pharmacy floated away. It's gone. We have no service stations or gasoline. Everything's gone. We need help and I was grateful VetComm did what it could”.

Monroe contacted Walmart in nearby Gainesville to get the victims much-needed supplies.

“Our leaders get on TV talking about sending $750. Well, $750 doesn't go very far”, said Monroe. “So, we rallied, and we got about 300 items like deodorant, toothbrushes, even blankets. What broke my heart was Shelley telling me they needed 27 tubs specifically for what was left of their belongings from the storm”.

Jefferson said he was grateful for the help.

“Thank you, VetComm for being a part of this recovery effort because without you we wouldn't be where we're at today which is hopeful", said Jefferson.

With Milton now ready to strike again, Monroe hopes others follow her lead and take action to help the victims, not just veterans who are affected.

This is the impact that we had as an organization, but we are just one company" said Monroe. "If you have the resources to step in and help, please contact us and let us connect you with the folks down there."
