Thanks goes to everyone involved. Selling a business is a complicated process with two willing parties. Over the last few months, all parties have gotten to know one another and are confident the business will continue to thrive under its new ownership, Says Lange.

The seller, is moving on to new life adventures, and is pleased with the outcome, citing financial stability, freedom, and peace of mind.

"It happens after every closing. If I'm fortunate to be in the same room as the seller, I see the exhale, relief and excitement that comes over them, Lange adds. "It's one of the rewarding parts of the job.

Lange's commitment to ensuring successful transitions in ownership has earned him a strong reputation in the industry. "Helping business owners achieve their financial goals and move forward with confidence is what makes this job rewarding," said Lange. "It's not just about selling a business—it's about making sure the new owners are set up for success and the seller is able to step into the next phase of life."
