

PatentPC Founder Attorney Bao Tran Discusses Why Most Patent Claims Fail

SAN FRANCISCO, CA, UNITED STATES, October 21, 2024 /EINPresswire.com/ -- Patent claims are the heart of any patent application, defining the scope and protection of an invention. Yet, many inventors—especially first-time patent filers—struggle to grasp the importance of crafting precise and enforceable patent claims. PatentPC, a leading intellectual property firm, is Patent claims are where inventors either win or lose their protection. A well-crafted claim can be the difference between a strong patent that fends off competitors and a weak one that's bypassed.”

Attorney Bao Tran, PatentPC founder addressing this challenge with valuable insights from Attorney Bao Tran, explaining what every inventor needs to know to secure strong patent protection.

Patent claim rejections are not uncommon, with nearly 40% of initial applications receiving objections due to overly broad or vague claims. According to the United States Patent and Trademark Office (USPTO), applications with well-defined claims are not only more likely to be granted but also stand a stronger chance in litigation if challenged. Getting the claims right the first time can save inventors from costly amendments or even losing their IP rights down the line.

Bao Tran, an experienced attorney and founder of PatentPC, explains that patent claims are where inventors either secure or lose their protection. He emphasizes that a well-crafted claim can be the difference between a strong patent that deters competitors and a weak one that can easily be circumvented. Tran further points out that inventors often fall into the trap of drafting overly broad claims, which can lead to rejections or legal challenges. He notes that being specific in claims doesn't limit an invention; rather, it ensures that it's fully protected.

The statistics tell a compelling story: patents with narrowly tailored claims that directly correspond to the invention's core features have a 25% higher success rate in avoiding litigation.
