The global Food Packaging Film Market is expected to grow at 6.2% CAGR from 2024 to 2032. It is expected to reach above USD 194.27 billion by 2032 from USD 125.23 billion in 2024.

Convenience food is widely consumed because it is ready to eat, has a long shelf life, and is portable. These goods include beverages, chocolate, finger foods, snacks, and more. In ready-to-eat containers, these food are often hot and need less preparation time. Because sedentary lifestyles are driving up demand for ready-to-eat snacks, convenience food is predicted to expand.

Moreover, the main driver of market expansion is increased working population and rising individual disposable income. The market for food packaging will grow as a result of most people choosing foods that are easy to digest. The fast-paced lifestyles of customers have led to a significant demand for fast food items.

Food Packaging Film Market Challenge

Reducing the resources necessary to package a product and, consequently, the waste produced by packaging materials is intimately related to sustainability. It has to do with employing the best possible mix of primary, secondary, and/or tertiary components to minimize the volume of primary resources used in the initial production process.

Manufacturers have been focusing on using fewer materials to reduce the weight and size of packaging. Packaging waste is decreased as a result of this trend toward smaller packaging. According to its packaging reduction standards, the New York City Department of Environmental Conservation advises using shrink wrap or poly wrap over box packing in order to minimize bag packaging and container size.
