We're excited to have Dr. Westerik lead us into this new era, as we look to add to our products and services and expand our network of global partners and providers”

Dr. Paul Eidson

MEG CEO, Dr. Paul Eidson, says that Madison has been reinventing itself as of late and is entering a new chapter in its operational history. “We're excited to have Dr. Westerik lead us into this new era,” Dr. Eidson stated. “As we look to add to our products and services and expand our network of global partners and providers, I know that MEG is in good hands.”

When asked about her plans for the next few months, Dr. Westerik said this in response:

“Professional development and upskilling are both keys to bulletproofing careers and building foundations for lifelong learning. And that's just what we have going on at the School of Professional Development. One of the things I'm really excited about is launching scalable versions of our ATLAS Learning Management System and Student Information System for industries beyond higher education. All of these new services and products will be coming online throughout this final quarter of 2024 and into 2025. It truly is an exciting time to be a part of this organization, and I'm honored to lead such a great team."
