Women Entrepreneurs @ Chapman gathered for an insightful and collaborative session

Show Her the Money sheds light on the alarming statistic that female founders receive less than 3% of all venture capital funding, even though women represent 49% of all startups. The film explores the challenges women face in securing funding and offers insight into how potential allies, including male allies, can help address the disparity. Featuring visionary female investors and entrepreneurs, the film is a call to action for the business community to support diverse women innovators.

Following the screening, a panel of the film's producers will discuss the issues raised and take questions from the audience, offering a deeper dive into the journey of female founders striving for success in a male-dominated venture capital landscape.

WomenEntrepreneurs@Chapman is a new initiative designed to provide female entrepreneurs with the resources, mentorship, and networking opportunities needed to overcome challenges in the business world. The program aims to address key issues such as:

Access to Funding: Despite representing 49% of startups, women receive only a small fraction of venture capital funding.

Gender Bias: Women often face gender stereotypes that affect how they are perceived by investors and stakeholders.

Work-Life Balance: Female entrepreneurs frequently juggle the demands of their businesses and personal responsibilities.

Networking and Mentorship: The program will create access to influential networks and provide mentorship from seasoned female entrepreneurs.

“Our mission is to create a space where female founders can connect, learn, and grow,” said Dr.
