in the forecast period. The utilization of biomarkers for heart disease patients has significantly increased in recent years. Currently, natriuretic peptides are the most commonly used biomarkers, aiding in the diagnosis of heart failure. Additionally, circulating biomarkers like high-sensitivity C-reactive protein are employed for diagnosing heart failure. Heart disease remains one of the leading causes of death among various racial and ethnic groups in the United States. As heart diseases become more prevalent, the demand for biomarkers is likely to rise.
