provider, Autism Behavior Services, Inc. (ABSI) proudly announces the availability of over 150 social story resources designed to support families, schools, and educators in fostering social-emotional learning for individuals with Autism Spectrum Disorder (ASD). These resources are accessible both as downloadable digital books from the free library of social stories for Autism and as engaging videos on ABSI's YouTube Channel, offering a comprehensive approach to behavior analysis and educational support.

Created in collaboration with a team of experienced clinical professionals, these resources leverage decades of expertise in behavior analysis. The stories are brought to life by the award-winning animator and designer Ryan Wang, alongside the acclaimed young adult fiction author Evan Jacobs (Moonbeam Children's Book Award Winner in 2013 and 2018). This dynamic partnership ensures that each story is not only clinically sound but also creatively compelling, holding the attention of audiences both young and old.

"It is an honor getting to create content like this," stated Wang. "It's one thing to do something you love, it's another thing to do something you love that is also meaningful to others."

"I've been writing since I was 8," stated Jacobs. "It's a joy to communicate and connect with readers and viewers in such a direct way."

Thousands of digital books are downloaded monthly, underscoring the high demand and value these resources provide to the community. Additionally, ABSI's YouTube Channel has proven to be an invaluable asset, with thousands of hours of social-emotional learning content being streamed each month.
