COVRSPORT, the unique excess medical product offered to athletes under 25, will help provide benefits for medical bills where health insurance falls short. COVRREG protects registration fees when athletes are not able to continue participation in sports for a covered reason such as injury, illness, and more.

“This collaboration with Sport:80 is perfectly aligned with our mission of promoting athlete safety and risk management. COVR products provide crucial financial support to young athletes and their families, ensuring an injury doesn't cause a financial crisis and bridging the gap between traditional insurance and the real needs of youth athletes,” said Matt Stone, SVP of Revenue & Strategy at Amsis. “We're excited to bring this solution to Sport:80's network and believe it can have an extremely positive impact for their community."

"At Sport:80, we're focused on delivering solutions that provide benefits at all levels of the sporting pyramid", said our Chief Operating Officer, Jonny Turner. "This partnership allows us to offer crucial support to families and young athletes, empowering them to fully enjoy their sporting journey without the fear of financial setbacks."
