The Nightingale Awards of Pennsylvania honors individuals whose contributions have elevated the nursing profession and positively impacted patient care across the state. Diane Salter’s recognition reflects her remarkable achievements in fostering healthy workplace cultures, empowering healthcare leaders, and driving impactful workforce transformation.

With over two decades of leadership experience, Salter has been instrumental in guiding healthcare organizations toward improved workplace practices. As a consultant with the Healthy Workforce Institute, she focuses on developing leadership strategies that address workplace bullying and incivility while promoting sustainable, collaborative, and respectful cultures. Her leadership philosophy aligns seamlessly with HWI’s mission to empower healthcare organizations to cultivate healthier, more productive work environments.

“We are thrilled and incredibly proud to see Diane honored with this prestigious award,” said Dr. Renee Thompson, CEO and Founder of the Healthy Workforce Institute. “Her dedication to advancing nursing leadership and her commitment to creating positive work cultures are truly inspiring. This recognition is well deserved and reflects her unwavering passion for making healthcare a better place to work for all.”

Salter’s leadership and influence have not only contributed to individual team success but have also helped shape systemic improvements across healthcare institutions. Through her work at HWI, she has guided leaders in developing practical, sustainable strategies that improve employee well-being, enhance patient care, and drive operational excellence.

The Healthy Workforce Institute congratulates Diane Salter on this remarkable achievement and is honored to have her as part of the HWI team, reinforcing our shared mission of transforming healthcare workplaces for the better.
