The journey to this monumental event was made possible by generous donors, with over $100,000 raised for training, preparation, and travel. Coach Paige Palazzolo expressed deep gratitude, saying, "There are no words we could say that could accurately provide a proper thank you to our donors for the World Cup. Without them, we wouldn't be able to train, prepare, travel, or compete at this level. Thanks to our supporters, these women can make history by having the USA represented in the first-ever Women's Amputee World Cup."

Player, Tracy Danzey, expressed her excitement about being part of this groundbreaking event:

"Being an adaptive athlete who gets to be a part of this foundational and historic event is beyond my wildest dreams. We want to make the United States proud and bring home this Cup!"

Her words capture the passion and determination driving the U.S. Women's National Amputee Soccer Team as they prepare for the inaugural Women's Amputee World Cup.

Beyond competing, the U.S. team is driven to inspire girls with amputations and limb differences worldwide, showing that they have a future in sports. "The women are not only motivated to compete but also to inspire girls with amputation and limb differences around the world," Coach Palazzolo added.
