The Togetherness Series will officially kick off with its first event on November 28 with life coach Aoife McElwain and will continue through mid December with speakers including psychotherapist and popular podcast host Whitney Goodman, estrangement researchers and authors Karl Melvin and Becca Bland, an engaging social mixer and other events. The full line up of speakers and schedule can be found on the events page on Together Estranged’s website.

“November is a time for our community to come together when many around the world are joining their families. We create chosen communities to heal and grow so that we can live well even as we navigate estrangement,” says TE CEO Angel Cassin.

“Through publicizing and promoting the series in advance and as part of Family Estrangement Awareness Month, we wish to reach more people who may be experiencing estrangement and may feel alone. It also serves as an opportunity to encourage productive conversation around estrangement more broadly within the larger discourse.”

Throughout the year, Together Estranged hosts monthly online support groups and publishes regular content to support the community ranging from monthly advice columns, an educational series, reflections on experiences while estranged such as parenting, as well as a hosted lecture series.
