Avocado is usually found in the warm and tropical climate of Mexico and Central & South America. It serves as a rich source of monosaturated fats. It is used as an active ingredient in salads, savory dishes, desserts, and milkshakes. It is rich in potassium; fiber; and vitamins such as A, B, C, E, and K. Moreover, avocados contain phytochemicals such as beta-carotene, lycopene, beta-sitosterol, and anti-oxidants.

One of the major factors that drives the growth of the avocado puree market are changes in lifestyle across the globe coupled with increase in awareness about health. People are searching for healthy alternatives to combat health issues such as heart disease and obesity. This oil has gained popularity among these people because of its health benefits. Thus, driving the Avocado Puree Market Demand

There are many competitive products of avocado available at low cost in the market. These include extra virgin hemp oil, olive oil, chia seed oil, and others. This limits the growth of the avocado puree market. The rise in awareness for avocado puree in untapped regions and growth in trading relations, especially with Latin American countries, act as an opportunity for the Avocado Puree Industry.
