Organic Teff Grain

Teff is known as the world's smallest grain, but its nutritional qualities indubitably outweigh its tiny size. As a whole grain, Maskal Teff Organic Teff Grain comes in ivory and brown varieties and has a nutty flavor and nutritionally dense properties that stay intact through cooking. As a superfood, teff is full of complex carbohydrates, proteins, minerals, and fiber. It is high in calcium, with one cup of cooked teff offering the same amount of calcium as a half-cup of cooked spinach. Teff grain can be simply prepared like a polenta or oatmeal, or used as a replacement for other grains such as quinoa or couscous in side dishes or salads.

Carrying all of our teff products in organic options responds to the discerning, label-conscious consumer who is already familiar with or curious to try teff.”

Organic Teff Flour

Maskal Teff Organic Brown Flour is ground fresh daily, retaining the same nutritional value as the grain. Teff flour is most commonly used to make injera, an Ethiopian cuisine staple, but can also be used in baked goods as a gluten-free option for imparting a whole wheat taste. Its versatility also lends itself to other common flour uses, like making pasta dough or thickening soups and gravy.

"Carrying all of our teff products in organic options responds to the discerning, label-conscious consumer who is already familiar with or curious to try teff," said Royd Carlson, agriculture manager for Maskal Teff. "The product line is already gluten-free, non-GMO, and a climate-friendly crop, so we are thrilled to tick the final box on what we believe is at the top of our customer's list when considering teff compared to other ancient grains."

Maskal Teff's organic teff flour and grain are available for purchase in 14 oz. bags and 25 lb. bags, or sampler 4-packs. They are available at teffco.com and Amazon.
