*Vicki DeArmon, Publisher
Sibylline Press*

“Sibylline Press was formed to publish the brilliant work of women authors 50 and over. Sibylline Digital First is our way of bringing even more of the work of this overlooked demographic to the voracious e-reader,” said Vicki DeArmon, Publisher of Sibylline Press.

The first title to be published under the Sibylline Digital First imprint is Murder without a Duck, by Claudia H. Long. In this cozy mystery, a recently divorced and temporarily suspended lawyer flees to the small town of Simpato in Northern California to her deceased parents' old home. When a murder happens minutes from the spot she is taking a hike, she finds herself dangerously at the epicenter of the town's long-held hometown secrets. If she survives it, she may even discover the answer behind the mysterious deaths of her parents.

November offers two more titles in the mystery genre. Bartender Wanted (November 22) by Maureen Anne Jennings transports readers to NYC where Rose Leary, a bartender and a writer, may be the next target for murder unless she figures out the murderer first. A Dead Man Speaks (November 29), a supernatural crime thriller, by Lisa Jones Gentry, tells the story of Clive January who is murdered in the novel's first pages and begins a paranormal investigation after death into who did it.
