Alcohol use disorder affects millions across the U.S., often resulting in difficult and uncomfortable withdrawal symptoms when individuals attempt to quit drinking. Alcohol withdrawal can involve a wide range of symptoms, from tremors and nausea to more severe complications such as hallucinations and seizures, known as delirium tremens (DTs).

These symptoms can persist for weeks or even months in some cases. Ascendant IOP NYC's intensive outpatient program (IOP) offers a structured and compassionate approach to managing these symptoms in a safe environment.

Alcohol Withdrawal: Understanding the Phases

Alcohol withdrawal typically follows a progressive timeline:

First Phase: Within 12 hours of the last drink, symptoms such as agitation, tremors, and insomnia may appear.

Second Phase: Within 24-48 hours, symptoms escalate, potentially leading to seizures. Medical supervision is critical during this period.

Third Phase: DTs symptoms, including confusion, hallucinations, and seizures, may appear 48-72 hours post-drinking.

Fourth Phase: Lasting weeks or months, some individuals may experience post-acute withdrawal syndrome (PAWS), which includes ongoing sleep and emotional issues.

Ascendant IOP NYC Treatment Options

Residential Rehab: Offers a safe space for individuals to detox under 24/7 medical supervision, with staff on hand to address symptoms as they arise.
