Georgia was the Pimiento Capital of the World long before it became the Peach State, & Ms. Bettye Jean was its Queen!

WOODBURY, GA, UNITED STATES,
November 20, 2024 /

EINPresswire.com/ -- The City of Woodbury is proud to announce Ms. Bettye Jean Waddell as the Grand Marshal for its upcoming Christmas Parade. At the age of 91, Ms. Waddell, who was crowned the very first Pimiento Festival Queen in 1950, remains a beloved figure and an enduring symbol of Georgia's rich agricultural history.

A Living Legend

Ms. Waddell, just 16 years old when she was chosen as Georgia's first

Pimiento Queen, is celebrated today as a Georgia State Treasure. Her legacy as an icon of the state's history continues to inspire the community, making her the perfect choice to lead this year's festive celebration.

A Storied Past

The City of Woodbury became synonymous with the pimiento pepper industry when, in the 1920s, it became home to the largest pimiento canning factory in the United States. Declared "The Pimiento Capital of the World" in 1950, Woodbury's Dromedary Plant processed millions of pounds of the sweet pepper until the early 1990s. The annual Woodbury Pimiento Festival & Parade was once the grandest in the country, attracting dignitaries such as Senator Herman Talmadge and Governor Ernest Vandiver.

Ms. Waddell fondly recalls her childhood days helping her father grade peppers, which they would take into town by horse and buggy to sell. Growing up as the youngest of 12 children on a farm with over 200 acres of cotton and smaller plots of pimientos and corn, she recalls, "I hated
