/EINPresswire.com/ -- During the summit, Ms. Ovtsynova engaged in productive discussions with the delegation of the Republic of Kazakhstan. Key aspects of international cooperation on climate initiatives were deliberated, with particular emphasis on uniting global efforts to combat climate change and the pivotal role of public organizations in this endeavor.

The unification of efforts by three nations in combating climate change is precisely the kind of international cooperation that ALLATRA IPM consistently supports and promotes.”

The Republics of Kazakhstan, Azerbaijan, and Uzbekistan signed a Strategic Partnership Agreement on the production and transmission of green energy. Presidents Kassym-Jomart Tokayev, Ilham Aliyev, and Shavkat Mirziyoyev endorsed the document. President Tokayev of Kazakhstan remarked that this event opens a new chapter in the collective pursuit of sustainable development. President Aliyev of Azerbaijan highlighted that the agreement elevates the fraternal relations between the countries to a new level. President Mirziyoyev of Uzbekistan noted that the significance of the agreement extends beyond mere economic interests.

combating climate change is precisely the kind of international cooperation that ALLATRA IPM consistently supports and promotes. Such initiatives not only foster technical and scientific progress but also lay a solid foundation for uniting people around universal dialogue and jointly achieving sustainable development goals,” stated Ms. Ovtsynova.

In an exclusive interview with Anewz TV channel, Ms. Ovtsynova further emphasized the urgency of international cooperation in addressing the climate crisis: “Now more than ever, it is crucial to establish effective mechanisms for international interaction. The climate crisis knows no national borders, and only by joining forces globally—from public organizations to governmental structures—can we develop effective solutions to protect our planet.”

Dr. Egon Cholakian, national security and climate expert and official representative of ALLATRA, echoed this sentiment: “Creating favorable conditions for international scientific collaboration is a critically important step in the fight against climate change. We must urgently establish effective platforms that unite the scientific community, enabling experts from different countries to work together on solving the climate challenges facing humanity.”
