Market dynamics

According to a report by Allied Market Research, the global ostomy drainage bags sector is predicted to cite an impressive CAGR of 3.8% with a revenue of $2,409.38 million by 2030. The industry is gaining momentum due to a surge in inflammatory bowel diseases and a rise in the prevalence of colorectal cancer cases.

However, the sector is facing a downturn due to the availability of alternative clinical procedures. Nevertheless, there is a growing number of product approvals and a rise in demand for ostomy bags by the geriatric population.

Advanced technology assessment

The report analyzes the latest technologies in the ostomy drainage bags market to assist manufacturers in advancing their product range. Modern ostomy bags now feature advanced odor control technologies that effectively neutralize unpleasant smells, greatly enhancing user experience and boosting confidence for individuals with ostomies. Moreover, advances in adhesive technology have resulted in skin-friendly adhesives that reduce irritation and discomfort. These adhesives are engineered to create a secure seal while remaining gentle on the skin, offering significant benefits for long-term users.

Two-piece ostomy systems have become popular for their flexibility, allowing users to change the bag without disturbing the adhesive base. This system is especially beneficial for individuals with sensitive skin, as it reduces the need for frequent adhesive changes and minimizes potential skin irritation.
