The Kidsplay World Cup of Soccer is one of Jordan's most powerful contributions. This year, nearly 500 kids from diverse backgrounds gathered at BC Place to compete in a celebration of talent, diversity, and sportsmanship. For many of these young athletes, it was the chance of a lifetime—an opportunity to showcase their skills on an international stage in one of the most iconic venues in Canada. BC Place, known for hosting world-class events, will also be the venue for the 2026 Olympics, adding to the significance of this moment for the players. Jordan Sidoo, deeply involved in the event, through providing scholarships to ensure that financial barriers didn't prevent deserving players from participating. He wasn't just a donor; he was present, offering mentorship, encouragement, and guidance, making sure each child felt seen and supported. His belief in their potential wasn't just inspiring—it was transformative.

At Supra Soccer Academy, Jordan's support has been equally impactful. As an advisor and fundraiser, he's played a pivotal role in ensuring that athletes—regardless of their financial background—have the chance to train at an elite level. By providing scholarships and funding opportunities to send players to international tournaments, Jordan has helped open doors to a world of opportunities. But it's not just about soccer—it's about helping these athletes build the confidence and character to succeed in life. Through his efforts, Supra Academy has become a place where young players not only develop their skills but also their resilience, discipline, and leadership.

Jordan's love for soccer and his unwavering dedication to the next generation is what ties these two initiatives together. Whether at the Kidsplay World Cup, where he watched young athletes chase their dreams on the field, or at Supra Academy, where he helped build a foundation for long-term growth, Jordan's involvement is a testament to his belief in the power of sport to shape lives. Through his efforts, countless young athletes have been given the resources and opportunities to pursue their dreams—and with his support, they've learned that the journey is just as important as the destination.

The Kidsplay World Cup was a moment of greatness for all involved—a reminder of what's possible when young people are given the chance to shine. And for Jordan, it was another step in his ongoing mission to give back to the sport he loves and to the young athletes who will carry it forward. With every tournament, every scholarship, and every moment of mentorship, Jordan Sidoo is helping to shape a brighter future for soccer—and for the next generation of players.
