Part Two delves deeper into Johnson's journey, sharing fibroids' physical and emotional toll. Despite previous treatment, her fibroids have returned, necessitating the star of We TV "Toya & Reginae" to consider the impact fibroids have on her health, family, and career. In the first episode, "Back in the Fight: Fibroids Return," Johnson reveals to her husband, Robert "Red" Rushing, that her fibroids have returned even stronger. Johnson underwent a myomectomy in 2018, which brings back painful memories.

"It was almost like having a c-section again," Johnson said, comparing the myomectomy she had in 2018 to having her daughter Reginae Carter, who she had with her ex-husband, rapper Lil Wayne. "Now the fibroids have returned, and they are worse than ever."

Johnson was drawn to creating a vlog to chronicle her experience in real time after her role in USA Fibroid Center's "I Have a Right" campaign, which helped reach thousands of women about choices other than hysterectomy to treat fibroids.

The Vlog, "A Fibroid Journey," provides insight from USA Fibroid Centers' fibroid physicians to encourage open conversations about women's health and dispel misinformation about the disease and treatment.

Toya's story highlights the importance of prioritizing patient choice. Fibroid recurrence after myomectomy is why women need treatments that can cure fibroids rather than just managing the symptoms."

"Toya's story highlights the importance of prioritizing patient choice. Many women we see have experienced fibroid recurrence after myomectomy," Dr. Katsnelson noted.
