Mueller's Helping Hand is a beacon of support for nonprofit organizations dedicated to making a difference. This year, more than 250 entries from six states were submitted, marking a significant expansion of the initiative beyond Texas as Mueller continues to grow and uplift communities across the nation.

The Women's Crisis Services of LeFlore County stands as a pillar of strength for individuals who have experienced physical or emotional abuse, domestic violence, stalking, or sexual assault. The organization will now have a new facility that elevates its mission, providing vital therapy, shelter, crisis intervention, and court advocacy in a region facing high poverty rates within the Choctaw Nation. The new building, erected in just three days by the dedicated team from Cornerstone Building Brands, including Mueller team members, was officially dedicated on October 10.

During the ceremony, Matt Ackley, President of Shelter Solutions at Cornerstone Building Brands, presented the keys to Bethany Black, Executive Director of Women's Crisis Services of LeFlore County. The event brought together local government officials, law enforcement, tribal dignitaries, and volunteers committed to creating a safer community in a state that ranks first in domestic abuse in the country.

"This generous donation of a Mueller shelter is a tremendous help as we work to break the cycle of violence within LeFlore County and our community," said Black. "There are hundreds of women searching for a safe space to escape their current situations, so expanding our impact and capabilities is crucial to giving the best care we can."

Since its inception in 2009, the Helping Hand initiative has completed 15 builds, transforming the lives of numerous organizations focused on vital community services, including medical care, child welfare, and vocational education. This represents a significant step as Mueller continues to build hope beyond Texas.
