About Landau Eugene Murphy Jr.

Landau Eugene Murphy Jr. is the soul-and-Sinatra singing sensation who first rose to national attention on NBC TV's "America's Got Talent."

His debut album "That's Life" spent several weeks atop the Billboard Jazz charts and in the Top 40 overall. Landau has since released four additional well-received albums including his latest first-ever album of all original material full-length album "I'm Not Messing Around". All songs have been written or co-written by Landau and the album's producer, Rob Hegel, best known for his work with Air Supply, Labelle's Sarah Dash, and his solo career, which included appearances on American Bandstand and scoring the themes for many network television shows including "Don Kirshner's Rock Concert".

He has penned an Amazon #1 best-selling memoir, appeared on several network TV shows, had a featured role in a film, was nominated for an NAACP Image Award, was named one of the Top Outstanding Young Americans by the United States Jaycees, and has toured around the world, performing hundreds of sold-out concerts.

During the COVID-19 pandemic and his forced time off the road, Landau turned his attention to his education, went back to school online, and received his high school equivalency diploma three decades after dropping out, proving it's never too late to graduate. Landau is now a leading advocate for adult literacy.
