Key Highlights from the Report:

=> Tariff Turbulence: Businesses are preparing for anticipated tariff increases under the new U.S. administration, prompting early stockpiling efforts. While this activity may drive surges in freight demand, it has also introduced volatility in both air and ocean freight markets, with ripple effects expected across major trade lanes.

=> Holiday Chaos Meets Capacity Crunch: The peak holiday season has propelled airfreight rates to record highs, particularly on critical Trans-Pacific and Europe-bound lanes, as retailers rush to secure inventory. In contrast, ocean freight demand is slowing, with softer market conditions anticipated for the coming month, especially for shipments originating from China.

=> Spot Rate Surprises: Shifts in long-haul ocean freight rates indicate challenges in maintaining General Rate Increases, reflecting uneven demand patterns. At the same time, airfreight rates on intra-Asia routes have surged, driven by increased high-tech shipments from markets like Taiwan and South Korea, where demand for semiconductors and electronics remains strong.

Dimerco's report sheds light on how businesses can navigate these challenges, offering insights into demand planning, trade compliance, and supply chain optimization during this critical period.
