opioid addiction treatment, has announced a partnership with Mindyra Health, an innovator in mental health testing technology. This collaboration aims to integrate Mindyra's cutting-edge technology into New Season's electronic medical records system, further enhancing patient treatment outcomes by capturing comprehensive outcome data, including social determinants of health.

By incorporating Mindyra's advanced platform, New Season will gain deeper insights into patients' living environments and treatment progress, ensuring the highest quality of care for those affected by opioid use disorder (OUD). This integration represents a significant step forward in improving engagement both inside and outside of New Season clinics.

"Partnering with Mindyra allows us to prove and continuously improve the quality of care that we provide to our patients," said Jessica Matthews, Senior Vice President of Operations at New Season. "Mindyra's technology enables us to better understand and address the unique challenges each patient faces, particularly those influenced by their social and environmental conditions. This partnership reflects our ongoing commitment to providing compassionate, comprehensive care to individuals on their recovery journey."

Connor Patros, Chief Clinical Officer at Mindyra, expressed enthusiasm for the collaboration. "We are thrilled to partner with New Season in their mission to treat individuals recovering from opioid use disorder," said Patros. "Our technology is designed to capture and analyze the critical data needed to deliver personalized and effective care. Opioid addiction remains a significant issue in our country, and we're proud to contribute to moving the needle in the right direction."
