From the sacred peaks that gave rise to the world's finest teas to the historic Boston Tea Party Ships & Museum and Old South Meeting House—ground zero of the American Revolution— audiences witness how this simple beverage impacted cultures and history across the continents.

"Tea is a mystical realm. For thousands of years, this humble drink has connected humanity across cultures, yet its epic story remained untold," says director Christy Hui.

"Through the generosity of museums and collections across eighteen countries, we've pieced together tea's incredible journey. This film is about time travel through a teapot."

Tea historian Bruce Richardson, author of "A Social History of Tea," applauds: "The film has captured the essence of tea's history in a beautiful way that honors the beverage's rich traditions and communal spirit." Featuring exclusive interviews with renowned generational tea masters in Wuyi Shan, this tea documentary gives viewers a rare opportunity to peek into the ancient Chinese practices of growing and crafting teas that eventually influenced commerce and culture worldwide. "Every student of tea will want to experience these stories!" Mr. Richardson adds.

"Indie Rights is excited to bring this fascinating documentary about tea to a global audience," remarks CEO Linda Nelson.
