"We are deeply honored by this nomination from such a respected publication," said Dr. Steven Hacker, dermatologist and inventor of the Lumohs Dermaplane. "This recognition validates the hard work and innovation that went into designing the Lumohs Dermaplane, which was created to enhance outcomes, improve safety, and streamline efficiency for estheticians worldwide."

Revolutionizing Dermaplaning for Estheticians
The Lumohs Dermaplane sets a new standard for the industry by addressing these dermaplaning procedure pain points : Poor lighting or overly bright clinical settings can compromise both esthetician precision, outcomes, risks and spa ambiance. Similarly, repetitive strain and visibility challenges can lead to fatigue, back pain, and the risk of accidental injury during treatments.

"Our device is designed with ease of use in mind, allowing estheticians to work with precision and confidence while maintaining a soothing environment for their clients," Dr. Hacker explained. "With Lumohs Dermaplane, professionals can deliver superior results, avoiding danger zones, accidental injuries while minimizing physical strain and ensuring client safety."
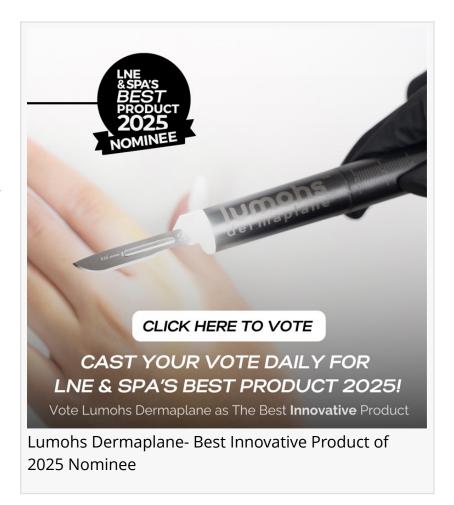

Recognition by a Respected Industry Authority
Being nominated by Les Nouvelles Esthétiques (LNE) & Spa Magazine carries special significance for Nano Surgical. Established in Paris in 1952 and distributed in nearly 70 countries, LNE & Spa has been the trusted voice of the esthetic and spa industry for over 62 years. The magazine's American edition continues its tradition of providing inspiration, support, and cutting-edge knowledge to skincare and spa professionals worldwide.

"This nomination reflects a shared commitment to advancing the aesthetics industry and empowering professionals with innovative tools like Lumohs Dermaplane," said Dr. Hacker.

Nano Surgical extends its gratitude to Les Nouvelles Esthétiques (LNE) & Spa for this honor and looks forward to continuing its mission of innovation and excellence in the aesthetic space.
