

Some of the best in the business and have been go-to advocates during a year defined by unprecedented political events, legislative logjams, federal spending cut crusades and big rulemaking swings.”

The Hill

Strategies:

HBS named Stacy to its executive leadership team in January in a newly created position, Executive Vice President Federal Government Affairs, where she oversees the firm’s federal lobbying practice in Washington. Stacy is an authority on how Congress operates and the decisions of federal agencies. Since joining HBS in 2023 from Capitol Hill her client list has quickly grown into a book of business rivaling long-time lobbyists. Among her notable success this year is advising university systems on identifying and securing congressional funding opportunities while providing public policy strategy to some of America’s iconic consumer name brands.

Eric Lausten, Managing Principal, Husch Blackwell Strategies:

Eric’s work focuses on transportation and energy issues, and his clients include transit agencies, local governments, rail contractors, mobility services, and manufacturers involved in new energy technologies, among others. He has counseled a number of entities in successful pursuit of congressional funding for transportation projects under the Bipartisan Infrastructure Law and clean energy grant and tax credit opportunities from the Inflation Reduction Act. Eric’s success in bringing diverse groups together, developing trust, and building coalitions based on shared interests has helped clients achieve substantial goals and advanced the firm’s federal practice growth trajectory and its recognition as one of Washington’s top performing lobbying firms.
